

Apryl Michelle Brown was born in Pensacola, Florida the fifth of six children. Her family moved to California when Apryl was 11 years old. Apryl grew up and became a very successful hair stylist, make-up artist, and fashion designer.

In 2004, April decided to get silicone injections on the black market.

Since childhood Apryl was plagued with a subconscious desire for a larger butt. She was often teased about her “flat butt” which led to a life changing decision that altered the course of Apryl’s life forever.

In 2011, Apryl Michelle Brown was given 24 hours to live. She had a staph infection that was plaguing her body and she was losing the battle according to her doctors. Unable to speak, Apryl knew she wanted to live.

Doctors told her family to prepare for the worst, death. The doctors felt the only chance to save her would be through amputation. Apryl would not only lose one limb, but both hands and feet, as well as her butt cheeks.

Apryl went through 27 surgeries and five grueling months of recovery in the hospital learning how to talk and walk again.

Apryl’s spirit rose like a Phoenix and today Apryl is LIVING and inspiring others through her various interviews and speaking engagements. Her positive and uplifting spirit touches and inspires anyone that comes in contact with her.

Apryl hopes that her life can be used as an example to show the world that no matter what kind of darkness we face in our lives, there is always a rainbow wrapped in darkness if you are willing to walk through the darkness utilizing amazing faith.

Apryl firmly believes that everything has happened FOR her not TO her. She feels her purpose is to help others see that life can be lived beyond tragedy.

Apryl’s story has been shared all over the world. She has appeared on television shows such as The Doctors, Katie Curic, Tricia, Inside Edition and more. Her interviews have appeared in magazines such as Essence, Madame Noire and many other news outlets.

To learn more about Apryl Brown, visit her website at www.aprylmichellebrown.com.

